Today January 20, Veritext Legal Solutions, a leader in deposition and litigation support solutions, announced the company has created a Veritext Student Resource Center for those interested in careers in court reporting. The Veritext Resource Center was established to support the court reporting profession and inspire the next generation of stenographers. The information available at the resource center includes: Introduction to the court reporting introduction to steno programs (NCRA A to Z™ and Project Steno Basic Training) Scholarship opportunities and court list application forms that report schools. A directory of industry associations. Court dental reporters and software resources. Articles and advice for students of thought leaders. In addition, all information at veritext resource center will be available in presentation packages that can be brought to career fairs or shared with friends and/or families interested in careers in court reporting. We are delighted to be able to offer a comprehensive resource center for anyone wishing to possibly enter the reporting profession. Valerie Berger, SVP of marketing and communications at Veritext. The court reporting community is experiencing shortcomings that projections show will only get worse not handled. We have worked with accredited schools and organizations to provide scholarships, introductory classes, theory and speed building to students interested in exploring the career of a court reporter and learning to be part of the profession. This resource center takes it one step early – and we hope it helps get prospects interested in the area of information they need to make a decision to move forward. Veritext is firmly committed to strengthening and advancing the court reporting profession. The company's recent contributions to the stenographic profession include providing scholarships for prospective stenographers, being a major supporter of Project Steno – raising over $25,000 in 2019 – offering free NCRA accredited continuing education (CEU courses) for stenographers, hosting & through Baltimore City Community College and Delaware State University, collaborates with and supports countless national and regional associations and participates in the NCRA A to Z™.
